Mendorf, January 2010

Hello Mr. König,

We have been grazing our 10 sheep on the meadow of our approx. 1 hectare property for years. Since a few years ago, the number of thistles has increased tremendously.

Our trees too, and particularly the old chestnut trees, have been suffering for several years from leaf blotch.

Following the transmission, the following changes occurred:

The thistles on the meadow disappeared as if they had been blown away, there is not a single one left. The condition of our chestnut trees has also improved significantly. The leaves were still on the trees until the end of September last autumn, while the year before, the trees were bare by the end of August.

In previous years, our sheep often suffered from footrot, but since the transmission, a significant improvement can be seen - last summer we had no such problems.

We are delighted at these changes. The belief in Quantec has therefore naturally increased even amongst sceptics.

I hereby approve publication of this consultation.
